Jobs:

Small businesses are responsible for the majority of job creation in the United States. In addition, small businesses are growing at a faster rate for women and minority owners than it is for the population at large. As such, small businesses represent an opportunity to reduce the gender and ethnic gap in the workplace.

Unfortunately, recent policies raised the costs associated with operating a small business. Every dollar that the government takes is one less dollar that is available to hire an additional employee. While small businesses could be hiring their neighbors, they are instead paying increased taxes and fees. Our future depends upon the small-business owner and therefore our future depends on policies that encourage the entrepreneur to continue to create the jobs that we want today and we want for our children tomorrow.

Education:

"Education is simply the soul of society as it passes from one generation to another." ~ G.K. Chesterton

The United States is unparalleled in the education available to those who take refuge in its borders. We do not restrict education to social classes, to ethnic groups, or to gender. But our opportunity to choose what is best for our children is limited. Just as we choose what higher-education best addresses our needs and desires, so should we be able to choose what primary education does as well. The more opportunities we have to allow individual families to choose what is best for them, the more we unleash the power of the next generation to make the biggest difference in our world.

Fiscal Responsibility:

We learned it from our grandparents and we will teach it to our children: America is a land where you can have almost anything--but you can't have everything. We have to make hard choices and we have to have a vision for what we want in life. That vision animates our daily lives from the moment we wake up early to the moment we crawl in bed at night. This is how we live and this is what we require of our elected officials.

There are many things that need to be done to make this world a better place, but we can't do them all. Those things that others can do better must be left to others.

Those things that only the government can do, the government should do extremely well. This means making hard choices; this means better opportunities for tomorrow; this means fiscal responsibility. It is not complicated, but it is not easy. But we have never been a people who choose what is easy over what is right. We are a people who choose what is right and find that the future is open to our greatest dreams.
